WHAT CUSTOMERS WILL WANT

THE ‘HOW-TO’ OF BUILDING INNOVATIONS THAT CREATE COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE AND GROWTH

OCTOBER 21/22
SOUTHFIELD, MI
In their pursuit of sustaining success, firms seek unmet customers’ needs by interviewing them. This is ineffective for two reasons.

- Competitors also do it and gain the same information - nobody has an advantage.
- Since developing an offering takes time, current customers’ needs become obsolete before the offering is delivered.

Creating an advantage and growth requires knowledge of customers’ future and latent needs, yet future is unknowable. But is it? With advent of General Theory of Innovation (GTI), you can solve this challenge! Based on GTI, you will be able to identify your customers’ latent and future needs today!

THE 'HOW-TO’ OF PREDICTING CUSTOMERS’ NEEDS

GENERAL THEORY OF INNOVATION

Forecasting market’s needs is enabled by the General Theory of Innovation (GTI), a scientific theory of innovation, which is based on the following principles.

1. As systems, products and services evolve. Any innovation is a single step in this process.
2. Despite perceived randomness, evolution has logic and a predominant direction, deviation from which predetermines troubles for an innovation.
3. Instead, obeying the logic of evolution (deliberately or not) enables reversal of the odds and creation of successful innovations virtually on demand!

GTI & THE FUTURE OF NEEDS

A better / cheaper/ faster solution to a known need does not ensure strategic advantage and growth. Identification of Unique and Meaningful needs (aka the RIGHT Problems) is required. Based on the underlying logic of evolution of products and services, GTI enables reliable identification of the RIGHT Problems and has 6 Strategies to do so. GTI approach to uncovering these strategic opportunities is called “Design for Advantage”. It is designed for identifying, prioritizing, selecting, and solving the RIGHT Problems. Sign up and learn this powerful methodology!

EVERY INNOVATION IS A SINGLE STEP IN THE EVOLUTION OF SYSTEMS. MASTER ITS LOGIC AND IDENTIFY THE FUTURE OF CUSTOMERS’ NEEDS!
THE INDUSTRY VALUES WHAT YOU WILL MASTER
